Serato Artist 1 and Serato Sample 1 are..Mechanisms of asymmetric cell division in human embryos. We have used electron microscopy to study the asymmetric cell division in human cleavage-stage embryos. We demonstrate that the 'medial' and 'lateral' blastomeres share the same nuclear content, chromatin and cytoplasmic membrane. However, the fusome of the 'lateral' blastomere is replaced with a plaque of fibrillar material. In addition, the plaques in the 'lateral' blastomere are part of the metaphase plate of the maternal pronucleus. The division plane in these blastomeres was parallel to the inner-blastocoelic surface of the embryo. The 'medial' blastomere in these early stages of development was more irregular than its sister and did not have a clear border between the two blastomeres. We propose a model for human asymmetric cell division during the first few cleavage divisions in which the 'medial' and 'lateral' blastomeres are formed from a common precursor cell. The 'lateral' blastomere, lacking a fusome, obtains a variety of polarities as it divides asymmetrically. The 'lateral' blastomere that divides to form the embryo must form a cell that is adjacent to the inside of the embryo. We also postulate that different divisions between the two blastomeres may be related to differences in chromosomal complements between the two blastomeres and an unequal role of the zona pellucida in cleavage-stage human embryos.
